Jungle life

Murt has always been crazy about monkeys. His longtime dream is to become a monkey researcher. One day, his dream comes true, and he embarks upon a life in the jungle that is not always easy but always full of impressive encounters with nature. His best friend stays put at home, but through the short messages, photos and sketches Murt sends her, she travels with him in thought – as will every reader of this picture book.

Rosie on the island

Rosie wants nothing more than to be a writer. With her friends Ruta and Lois, she travels to an island where she writes down everything she wants to put in her story: a mysterious dog transformation, an encounter with Babalú Ayé and Santa Barbara, and a cathartic dance among the white caps of the sea. Maybe some of it is made up, but so what?

In her picture book debut, Karen Runge has illustrated a story written by multiple-award-winning writer Monika Helfer.

Puma Drawing Into Dawn

Step by step, we get closer to cougar, frog, puffer fish and friends, as we observe Verena Pavoni's oil chalk Sgraffiti scratch art coming into being: The animals disappear only to reappear all the more impressively, while every line of Lena Raubaum's words allows us to approach them on a poetic level. At the end of the book, readers are invited to get creative themselves, and guide an animal of their choice toward the light of day.

OH NO!

Things that don't go well together

Stepped on a LEGO? Ouch! Left a book out in the rain? Stupid! Chewing gum with braces? No way!

Some things simply do not go together – but this does not stop Paulina Rauh from creating ingenious connections between these contradictions in her colorful illustrations.

What do you do when...?

Keeping Cool When Disaster Strikes

Two kids talk about encounters with wild animals and natural catastrophes like floods and fires, telling each other stories of people who have survived such catastrophes. Illustrated in bright special colors and complete with simple diagrams, the most important rules of conduct in the case of catastrophe become easy to understand.

An encouraging book in ten stories!

Future without spring

The world has changed dramatically. Nature is going to waste, life is fading, all colors have disappeared.

In a world that has lost its natural habitats, a boy and his grandma fight for what people only tend to start missing once it's gone: the beauty of nature and the hope for a future.

City life

A completely new part of the city is being built, so young it still seems surreal...Except for the people of all ages and sizes that make the pavement, the facades, and the cranes come alive. We meet them everywhere, sometimes only in passing. But each of them has their own story, complete with questions and dreams.

Inspired by a walk exploring the newly built Vienna district of Seestadt, Linda Wolfsgruber has created impressive paintings

Floundering?!

Moritz writes "school" in tiny scribbles, and "BLUE" in giant letters because that's what they look like to him from his spot in the tree. In art class, he draws flowers growing out of the black lines on his coloring pictures because he knows they're headed for the light. "That's no good", his teachers say. Luckily, a girl named Lana helps him tie his shoelaces and becomes his best friend. As well as the little flounder that has no room to dance in its tiny fish tank. When the science teacher asks Moritz to make an accurate drawing of the flounder, a miracle happens...

Lone child

"An only child is a lone child. Lone, not lonely, right?"

Corinna Schmelter-Pourian's high-contrast images strikingly underline her debut text about the world of the only child. Clever, funny, and imaginative, it encourages us to reflect on the advantages and disadvantages of being alone, of having siblings, and the difference between big and small.

What a Pine Tree is

Stories from the Botanical World

As each story in this book illustrates, plants offer us daily reminders of the fact that all things are connected. They consistently create the grounds for their own existence, again and again. And so we repeatedly find them at the centre of our lives.

In their new book, Florian Weiß and Lucia Jay von Seldeneck bring together 30 plants from all over the world, telling the story of each through text and images. Florian Weiß has provided this volume for book lovers with detailed illustrations.

Not Beyond the 7 Hills

Snow White's Grandkids have a Ball

Are you curious about a contemporary Snow White story, down-to-earth and wildly witty? Allusions to the Grimm's tale make for a completely new plot. Follow Mom and her seven kids' holiday plans and find yourself in an almost fairytale-like ambience – although they'll never reach their destination up in the snow-white mountains! But does it still matter if the big holiday plans won't turn out? Seven lively kids, many imaginative details, wild lines, and a punchy discourse make for a great time altogether.

My amazing summer with a goat

Arthur is expecting a quiet life, now that his family moved to a house right on the edge of woods. But all of a sudden, the goat belonging to his new friends starts to speak. Emperor Caesar Napoleon Alexander the Great, to give the animal its full title, has all kinds of lordly wishes that keep the three children on their toes. But the chaos only really starts when the friends' fathers start arguing over a bit of woodland.

Zorilla

People near the harbour are worried: a Zorilla marten has settled in their town. Nobody knows where it came from, nor why it has come. What is the animal up to? All the while, frenzied tales of its antics spread until, one day, a crowd of very concerned locals marches to its abode and is, to put it mildly, quite surprised!

A timeless and important story that can inspire courage and the overcoming of prejudice, to help everyone be more curious and interested in those they meet.

When the Magpie lost his white color

When the magpie king wakes up one morning, his entire plumage has changed to raven black! Where did the white disappear? Nobody knows the answer. The king's subjects whisper behind their wings, but none of them dares to address this mystery. Thus the magpie king harbors growing resentments towards his fate, towards his subjects, and the white in the world. This fairytale-like story by Michael Stavarič about a king on the search for his lost white identity is wonderfully matched by Linda Wolfgruber's aerial illustrations in black-and-white and pastel shades.

Mascha and the bear

A Folk Tale

This unpretentious folk tale has a new setting – the wood resembles a suburb, the bear becomes a hunter and trapper. Mascha goes out into the forest to gather berries, but she gets lost and held captive at the bear's hut. The bear is unwilling to let her leave, until at last she manages to free herself, relying on her own powers and wit. The layers of meaning remind us that we've all been held captive, that we've all had our bears ...

Aim high

Erasmus is a really particular elk. He dreams of being out in the open and seeing new things, something other than the forest he has known all his life. He starts running and discovers new horizons, seas, hills, valleys, a city! Until one day he just stops. In sum, Erasmus embodies a meaningful tale about longing and arriving. Franziska Walther employs large-sized illustrations, sequences, or poetic pics, in order to tell the story of an elk that rises above all expectations.

Polka for Igor

Igor is a special dog. You can't see this, but if you take the time to listen to old polka records with him you will be rewarded with stories from his past. For Igor was a hero in Poland at that time. Little Ola knows this. As soon as the needle begins scratching the record, Igor's blood begins to surge through his veins. And then, sitting in a wingback chair, the two of them travel through a story of casseroles and sauerkraut, tightrope dancers as tender as turkey schnitzels, Russian recorder players, Bengal tigers and sheep smelling of cuckoo flowers – accompanied by the sound of an accordion and a crackling open fire.

And then Your Head Will Burst

What would you reply if asked, "What is the soul?" And if you asked a child? How would a child explain a term we adults have tried to define in a thousand smart books? In cooperation with children, illustrator Christina Röckl created texts which she collected and translated into striking images. Thus, an abstract idea becomes a picture book for adults invented by children – original, delightful, and deeply moving.

A tangled thread

A child comes upon a long red thread. Soon, the thread gets tangled – at the same time entangling the child. When the child uses scissors in an attempt to control the increasing chaos, a living creature grows from the giant knot and starts to interact with the child. This is the starting point of a thrilling seesaw story that ends with the two characters' alliance in search of new adventures.

Ann Cathrin Raab and Mareike Postel demonstrate how beautifully a child's imagination works in creating new characters and new worlds.

Never-Ending Forest

With her magical pencil drawings and a few carefully chosen words, Julia Schlosser carries us off into a forest in the throes of change. We follow the little fox as it roams among the trees, listening to the stories that the other creatures tell it. But there is also a worrying rumble that the fox traces to a pair of gigantic, angry hands tearing up the soil. The fox flees, but where can it go?

It has heard somewhere that there is another forest – the never-ending forest. But does it really exist?

Cloud Animals and the Square

One particularly headstrong cloud just loves experimenting. It seems to have an inexhaustible trove of shapes – from a Christmas tree to a fluted cake, fantastical forms and geometric shapes. When it turns into a square, even the humans down below take notice. Despite its adventurous life, though, it feels an inexplicable sense of nostalgia. Then, one day, the wind carries it off into uncharted territory where our little cloud suddenly undergoes a new kind of change... and the ending becomes a new beginning.

Alberta's Shop of Dreams

Business is quiet at Alberta's secondhand shop in a little seaside town. One day, however, a man desperately searching for a parking space triggers gossip that there is something extra-special about Alberta's shop. People come flooding in, each with their own particular request: a chair with a long back and short legs, a grumpy cloud, more pepper in their life, an inflatable dumbbell. Alberta darts eagerly back and forth among the crowded shelves, looking for a fitting item – and she always comes up with the right answer. Then one day Alberta's loyalest customer, Pepe the fisherman, comes to town again and asks her the question that changes everything.

Oh Louise!

Louise is a very normal child – apart from the fact that everything she does goes hopelessly wrong. She even manages to leave a trail of devastation as a baby in her pram. As a young girl she accidentally lets a herd of horses run wild through the city and drains all the water from the sea. At each new gaffe the grownups exclaim “Oh Louise!”. It is therefore entirely foreseeable that a visit to a rocket launchpad winds up with Louise being shot into space. On an alien planet she runs into a boy called Louis, who is in the same situation. The two children join forces to show what you can achieve with a little cunning and a lot of self-confidence.
